this book first published in 1970 analyses the factors affecting the export performance of selected firms from particular uk industries in the period 1958 66 the study was designed to test at the level of the firm and industry the hypothesis that in the short run variations in exports are a function of the pressure of domestic demand it also obtained valuable information on the factors affecting the export performance and behaviour of firms

this paper examines the extent and structure of nominal protection in a large sample of sub saharan countries and provides estimates of the effects of this protection on the exports of these countries both tariff rates and the frequency of nontariff barriers are found to be appreciably higher on average in the sub saharan countries than in other developing countries the empirical estimates based on simulations of a simple model of trade and real exchange rate adjustment suggest that protection reduces the value of the sample countries exports relative to baseline levels by between 15 and 33 percent per annum and inhibits export diversification concerns about export growth within the euro area peripheral countries due to a lack of competitiveness within the euro area are a key policy issue our analysis suggests that i long term price elasticities for intra euro area exports are at least double those for extra euro area exports so traditional real effective exchange rate indexes may overstate the effectiveness of euro depreciation in restoring exports growth in the euro area periphery and ii there are surprisingly wide divergences across alternative relative price measures and even when relative price data suggest a steady loss in intra and extra euro area competitiveness the pace of deterioration depends on the measure of relative prices used
